One of our esteemed and reliable contemporaries states that a humane society attempted to asphyxiate several hundred cats in New York. Electrical sparks from the cats' fur caused an explosion in the gas chamber that wrecked the building. But the cats didn't need asphyxiating after that. Can any of our modest Vermont papers tell a bigger one than that?—Hardwick Gazette.

Well, there's the Rutland News which had a story the other day about a rabbit which rushed into the road and bit a man, or the Bennington Banner which told about a turtle which rescued a big trout from a fisherman. It seems to us that Vermont papers can hold their own!—Montpelier Argus.

Speaking of sparks, the Morrisville man who picked up a live wire and survived ought to offset the cat's-fur spark story, but he was only one of Vermont's wonders. Here is a Fairfield boy who filled his mouth with gasoline and set it on fire. He lived. Here's a watch that was buried a half century or so, and when dug up went—short distance.

It remains for Peacham, however, to put the cap-sheaf on the mountain of wonder by that inverted gobbler with the maternal instincts that is trying to hatch out a setting of eggs. If he does—what's a mere exploding gas chamber when compared with a flock of young turkeys with two fathers and no recognizable mother?—Rutland Herald.

How about the Randolph cat that was reported to be nursing a litter of foxes?—Bennington Banner.

If that St. Johnsbury hen that abandoned the job of hatching an egg within an egg had only succeeded in bringing forth a turkey within a turkey, our town would have been on the map with a nature wonder. Wonder why the hen didn't.

"Current Affairs," published by the Boston Chamber of Commerce, has made a canvass of nearly 800 trade and commercial organizations on the subject of a merchant marine. For a government owned and operated merchant marine eighty-two were in favor and 698 opposed. For government owned and privately operated merchant marine fifty-four were in favor and 711 opposed. To the question, "Do you favor subsidies from the government sufficient to offset the difference in cost between operation of vessels under the American flag and operation in the same deep-sea trades under foreign flags?" 558 answered yes and 186 no. This leaves little doubt about the views of practical business men on the matter of building up American shipping and Americans will do well to support the judgment of this class of citizens.

The establishment of a military camp at Plattsburgh where the private citizen may go and take a few weeks of military training shows the strength of public sentiment for better preparedness for military action. It is a private undertaking and does not bind any citizen to military service. Whatever military results may follow its establishment it seems sure that any one going there and taking the training would be greatly benefited by the exercise and discipline. It would prove a very beneficial way to spend a vacation at a minimum cost.

To our contemporaries who have so generously commented on the special edition of The Caledonian relating to the pure-bred cattle of Caledonia county we express our sincere thanks. The favorable notices it has been given increases our satisfaction with our effort to let New England know the high position this county holds in the production of good cattle. Caledonia county is a leader today and we have faith it will continue to be no matter how much the breeding of pure-bred cattle is developed elsewhere. We have been so favorably impressed with the quality and quantity that we find it difficult to stop writing about them.

If he has money enough the poor crank who attempted to kill J. P. Morgan and to blow up the capital building at Washington last week will be found crazy. If he hasn't he will probably serve some time in prison. His crimes were very serious in purpose but fortunately not serious in results. The fact that he could explode a bomb in the capitol building and enter the home of Mr. Morgan shows the possibility there is of taking advantage of the confidence of Americans and perpetrate some of the foulest deeds.

The fury and effectiveness of the Germans in their submarine warfare does not seem to abate in the least. But they are conducting it on more humane lines allowing the persons on board to save themselves. That is correct. The Germans have the right to destroy any of the enemy's ships after non-combatants have had an opportunity to escape and the world cannot deny that they have proven wonderful fighters. They must be conquered however or we shall soon be facing a world wide war.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw said she would not obey the summons to appear in court and testify against her husband, Harry Thaw. This is a pretty bold defiance of law and the courts, but why shouldn't she defy them? Her husband has made American law and American courts vile prostitutes before his money, and his wife can claim the same privilege. What a persistent offense to the nostrils of all right thinking people this travesty upon justice has become.

Two things in connection with the government finances show a healthy growth during the past fiscal year—expenses and deficit. The city is the country has nothing to show for it. We have none of the cheaper prices nor the economy that was promised with a change of administration, we have just bigger expenses and a bigger deficit. We also have higher taxes but less revenue. How do you like that for a domestic policy?

We continue to hear stories of starvation and other suffering by the destitute people of Mexico. We also hear that the bandit armies continue to plunder the country and stop relief trains sent by the Red Cross. We also hear the president is going to formulate a Mexican policy but it seems no nearer than a reign of decency in the harrassed republic to the south of us.

The 25 cent piece was made famous by the American Liver Tablets, the perfect laxative.

OUR SPECIAL EDITION

Comments of Contemporaries On The Paper and Its Showing.

One of the most attractive supplements published by any newspaper in Vermont in years is issued this week by the St. Johnsbury Caledonian, 12 pages being devoted to the pure-bred cattle in Caledonia county. The pages are embellished with many attractive illustrations, showing fine herds and glimpses of the farms where they are owned. The articles will be a revelation to many in showing the progressiveness of the Vermont farmer, as in the one small county 1,433 head of purebred cattle are owned, valued conservatively at $234,475, or at an average price of $163.63, including the young stock. There is a growing tendency not only in Caledonia county but throughout the state, to breed fine cattle, and the dairying industry is no longer conducted on the hit-or-miss method, as the work of the numerous cow-testing associations is going a long way toward making dairying an exact science. The successful farmer of the future will know just what is doing like the successful business man in industrial and mercantile lines.—Brattleboro Reformer.

The issue of the St. Johnsbury Caledonian this week was a most notable one. Many extra pages were devoted to the fine herds of cattle in its county—the first edition of the kind in the history of Vermont. It shows that the farmer is coming in to his own and the newspapers have recognized the fact. Typographical-ly, like everything from that office, it was a fine specimen of the "art preservative." Morrisville Messenger.

Through an illustrated supplement printed by the St. Johnsbury Caledonian this week, one gathers the impression that Caledonia county and the territory immediately contiguous thereto is well up in blooded cattle, if not at the front rank of the whole state. The contemporary has done a good stroke of work for the cattle interests of its section.—Barre Times.

The St. Johnsbury Caledonian's splendid supplement illustrating the pure-bred cattle interests of Caledonia county made so large a bundle, it was mistaken for one of those big Sunday newspapers in its wrapper and was neglected for a time. Many people will be surprised to learn that Caledonia county has no less than 1,433 head of pure-bred cattle valued at $234,475, or an average of $163.63. It costs no more to raise a good animal than a poor one, and the best is always the most profitable from every point of view.—Burlington Free Press.

The announcement that none but Vermont cattle would appear at the state fair was incorrect. Exhibits will be shown from Maine and New Hampshire, providing there is no out-break of the foot-and-mouth disease meanwhile. Judging from the supplement issued by the St. Johnsbury Caledonian, Caledonia county alone could make a very respectable exhibit of highly bred cattle without going outside.—Rutland Herald.

Vermont Live Stock.

Caledonia county claims to possess 1,433 head of pure-bred cattle conservatively valued at $234,475. These cattle are distributed in ninety-two herds, showing that the production of pure bred cattle is not the work of a few wealthy men but is a serious undertaking of a large number of practical farmers who cannot afford to produce fancy cattle but are producing good cattle as a business proposition.

Some other counties in Vermont no doubt surpass the Caledonia record considerably, and the total for the State must be far greater than is commonly thought.

The figures we have quoted are from the St. Johnsbury Caledonian, which prints an elaborate illustrated article on the subject. The largest herd of any single breed in the county contains 120 head and in only one other herd is the hundred mark reached with a single breed. There are four other herds of a single breed that number between fifty and seventy-five, eleven herds of from twenty-five to fifty and fifty-four herds with less than ten head each. This shows that many men have made a small beginning, and reveals the probability of a tremendous development in the production of pure bred cattle.

The Caledonian explains interestingly the process of breeding. It says:

The general method of building up a herd of pure bred cattle is to purchase a good bull and one or two cows and raise the heifer calves. Bulls are purchased often enough to prevent in-breeding or when further improvement of the herd is desired.

We give the results of one practical farmer in the county who has successfully worked out this plan. At first he bought two pure bred cows and a bull calf. Since then he has bought one imported cow and two what calves to be used as head of his herd. The cost of these six animals was $800. From their get he sold eleven cows for $1,320, three two-year-old heifers for $625, he estimates the money received for bull calves at $1,100 and is confident it is not less than this and has a herd now estimated to be worth $3,900. So the total live stock produced from these six animals is $6,900. Deduct the original cost of the animals bought ($800) and the net gain is $6,100. Meanwhile he has had the income from their milk and their keeping has been no more expensive than that of a common grade herd. Here is another record of ten years.

The man paid for the foundation of his herd and built at the head of his herd $135. He has received $140 for bull calves sold and has a herd valued at $6,250. This shows a net gain for ten years of $6,250 at no greater cost than the keeping of a grade herd.—Burlington News.

Man's Memory Short.

I have discovered from the frequent remarks this season, to the effect that this is the coldest season ever known, that man's memory is less than a year long. Being curious myself I have compiled the following:

	1914	1915
Mean temperature for May	53	49
Average maximum temperature for May	68	61
Average minimum temperature for May	39	38
Mean temperature for June	56	58
Average maximum temperature for June	67	72
Average minimum temperature for June	45	45

Fractions are eliminated. The records for the two years for May and June are substantially the same.
